An arrogant prince is cursed to spend his days as a hideous monster by an enchantress who saw no love in his heart for others. The only way, the spell could be broken was to earn somebody's love. Else, Beast will remain a monster forever. The spirited Belle from a small French town, who is constantly trying to fend off the attention of the conceited Gaston, enters Beast's castle after he imprisons her father, Maurice for trespassing. Belle, offers herself to Beast in place of her father. Beast accepts with a promise that she'll remain in the castle forever. With the help of his enchanted servants, Belle begins to draw the cold hearted Beast out of his self imposed isolation.

Beast saves Belle from the wolves in the forest after she flees the castle to save herself from his wrath. In the process, Beast gets hurt and is nursed back to health by Belle. He is attracted towards her innate goodness and agrees to release her from her promise. The selflessness of his act touches Belle's heart and she starts requiting her feelings to his new self. Meanwhile, Gaston gathers a frenzied mob of villagers and marches to the castle to release Belle and kill Beast. Beast gets the better of Gaston but is hurt in the process. As Beast is lying hurt, the enchantress comes and lifts the curse. Beast and the servants return to human form and there's happiness all around.
